GEORJANA

The soils are characteristic areal hills, stoned ground , even drywall stone.
Vegetation – mediterranean (dry grass and dense spruce).

There are roads in middle of dense fields so judges can normally monitor the work of dogs.

It is covered with typically Mediterranean vegetation. Hunting paths and breaks are well maintained. The abundance of small game and the mild Mediterranean climate provide for pleasant hunting moments.

The old historic City of Zadar, once the capital of Dalmatia, today is the administrative and cultural centre of the County of Zadar, which extends from the upper course of the Una in the north, to an island called Dugi otok, and beyond into the open sea. It also includes the lowland areas of Bukovica and Ravni kotari, the lake-like seas of Karin and Novigrad, an attractive shoreline and numerous islands, together with the Telašćica Nature Park, close to the Kornati National Park, and sections of the Paklenica National Park and the Velebit Nature Park.

The types of hunting grounds in the Zadar region vary according to the type of wildlife habitat, whether in the mountains or in the lowlands. In the rock-bound areas of southern Velebit, one can hunt small game such as hare, Rock Partridge and snipe, while in the higher grounds the game includes wild boar, chamois, deer and brown bear. The Zadar area is one of the last natural habitats of the partridge. It is also the venue of the International Championship for Bird Dogs, one of the most important in Europe. The Ravni kotari hunting ground offers the hunt for quail, pheasant and hare, and the interest of hunters may also be stirred by the opportunity to give chase to the golden jackal, whose population is quite large.
